California has changed tremendously since the Resources Agency was established over 60 years ago. This Agency and its Departments have helped shape modern environmental management and now tackle daunting challenges, including accelerating climate change. What can the past teach us about finding solutions to these challenges?

Join us for a never-before conversation with every former Natural Resources Secretary over the last thirty years. Together we will reflect on the agency's history and progress to date and discuss how it can shape our current work.
